

Abstract

The present invention relates to a feeding implement that can be used for self-feeding by a child, such as a toddler, or an individual having a disability. The feeding implement consists of a handle and a transport portion which is shaped and suitable for dipping into solid foods, such as purees and infant cereal. The transport portion has on its surface multiple protrusions and/or grooves to increase its surface area.